Oct 12, 2020 - Installing software in Linux is easy. I purchased the CS-3020/F5010/F5020 V3.2 software (but I also have access to 3.4) and I use a USB cable. I am working on a Window 7 system. When I plug in the cable, I get a message that the USB connection is disconnected and there is no welcome screen. If I turn off and on the computer again (via USB), the installation starts, but when I reconnect the cable, the computer starts up again with the shutdown message I read that the USB adapter driver was corrupted and therefore disabled. I ran a system reset tool to try and fix the problem, but that did not result in a solution. I tried reinstalling the USB adapter driver and that doesn't fix it. I checked my computer, which has all the necessary components, and I get the error message that "not enough storage space". I can reinstall Windows, but I can't find the space to install it.
