One day, a young girl named Violet went missing from a small town in northern Minnesota. When her body was later discovered in a state of extreme decomposition and suffering from third-degree burns, it was determined that Violet had been doused in gasoline and set on fire. Based on the horrific nature of Violet's death, we have to determine if she was murdered, if she was abducted by an unknown group of perverts, or perhaps was the victim of an animal attack. Welcome to the third edition of our Moderns series. We hope that these articles will help you to grasp the depth of the format, and also allow you to apply the foundations of the format to your different types of strategies. As this is the third of three Moderns articles, I thought we could start by looking at a particular strategy in the Modern format: the Lockbox. We know that RUG decks use the lockbox very well, and there are ways to counter the deck in response. But there are other decks out there that can use the lockbox to great effect, so let's examine and get a look at how it actually works. Lockbox vs Grixis Delver We first have to rule out one deck that already uses the lockbox as its staple: Elves. These are the Jack Goldman decks, which have swept the interweb and into pro events over the last few months. The deck is RUG, so the name is perfect, and it is also almost the exact same as Mono U Delver, minus two Shocklands for Bridge from Below and Library of Leng. The decks are of course quite different. The deck has a more traditional Stoneforge build where it is very light on lands and plays Aggro oriented strategies such as Quirion Ranger and Sylvan Advocate, usually being its primary in-game win condition. On the other hand, RUG's build is considerably heavier on lands, plays Feint more often, and has a bit more bomb draw in the form of Grafdigger's Cage. Playing aggressively, RUG with full-plays wins essentially is doing a bit of a Mash Up, swapping Grixis Delver's lands for Thragtusk, equipping it with the Grafdigger's Cage (although Thragtusk is a terrible planeswalker). Rather than going into too much detail, let's just discuss the basics of the deck and what has changed since the last article. If it's been a while since you played Modern, if you missed the original article, I would suggest reading that, as there is a lot to catch up with. In addition to being part of the same deck category, as RUG is a Delver shell, most of the general principles apply. Almost all the same principles apply, though the deck is slightly different. First, let's look at Shops in it. I'
