North Korean leader Kim Jong Un has announced a nuclear test site will open soon. Kim Jong Un said, in a televised address, that the Hwasong-15 ballistic missile, with a "reliable strike ability" had succeeded in striking "a target of strategic significance" in an area near the country's east coast. "We have confirmed the successful detonation of a hydrogen bomb in a safe and perfect way and with the ultimate goal of completing the state nuclear force," Kim said, according to state news agency KCNA. The US Pacific Command (PACOM) had speculated that the country could have done that some weeks ago, according to a defence official speaking to Reuters. Speaking anonymously at the time, the official said that the site was roughly 175 miles (280km) east of Pyongyang. 4:08am There were no US warships in the region, Pentagon officials said. The missile apparently flew over Japanese airspace for an estimated distance of more than 930 miles, according to the South Korea's Yonhap news agency, the longest reported flight distance for a North Korean missile. Kim would likely have been aiming for part of a US base or military facility as well as a major airfield in the area. North Korea has threatened pre-emptive strikes against the US, South Korea and Japan, and has said it's considering firing missiles near Guam. Wednesday's test was an apparent response to the United Nations Security Council's unanimous adoption last week of new sanctions aimed at curbing Pyongyang's nuclear and missile programmes. Pyongyang may be attempting to draw a distinction between "sanctions" and "provocations" to advance its security agenda. North Korea has conducted two nuclear tests in the past, in 2006 and 2009. It said in April last year that it had successfully produced a miniaturised warhead that could fit on a long-range missile, a claim widely accepted by analysts. According to state media, Kim made other remarks on Wednesday, declaring a suspension of long-range missile and nuclear tests and a halt to "reckless nuclear war practice". Mourners at funeral for U.S. soldier killed in Syria in 2014 4:06am Shortly after Kim Jong Un delivered his speech, state media reported that he "ordered the test of bigger-caliber nuclear weapons to be conducted in succession". He also ordered the construction of a new facility for testing submarine-laun
