The present disclosure relates to a sprocket in a pedal-driven bicycle, and particularly relates to a sprocket assembly for a pedal-driven bicycle that is capable of removing idle vibration of a pedal chain and provides a reliable rotation of a sprocket assembly and an entire pedal-driven bicycle. It is proposed that a group of teeth of a sprocket are embedded in a material such as sintered alloy through press molding by a press machine. Then, the rotation of the sprocket is prevented by temporarily fitting an inner ring to the outer circumferential surface of the sprocket that is inserted into the insert hole. When the peripheral speed of the inner ring is faster than that of the sprocket, the sprocket rotates relative to the inner ring. Therefore, a tooth portion of the sprocket engages with a portion of the inner ring that is not engaged with the sprocket, thereby generating an idle vibration. Therefore, a space is formed between the sprocket and the inner ring. It is feared that the idle vibration
