Purchases made after July 4th would have been eliminated had this additional information been known. The court reasoned that the inclusion of the Food Channel in the regression analysis would have produced a different result in determining the market share and that it was reasonable for Betterbox to omit information because the services provided on the Food Channel were outside the network of services that Betterbox deemed relevant. Without the Food Channel data in the regression analysis, Betterbox would have concluded that its loss of market share resulted primarily from the significant reduction in the number of purchasers of vanilla ice cream and frozen yogurt. Viewed under the standard enunciated in Soto and Smith, therefore, the evidence does not support Betterbox's claim that the error in the data analysis was negligible. A tariff from T-Mobile, which Betterbox claims reflects the market share of competing services in each area, shows that Betterbox lost approximately 45% of its market share when T-Mobile entered the market 6d1f23a050
