i have taken my eyes off the road and then, without warning, bam. i lurch forward as the front of the bike collides with a large piece of concrete on the roadway. i'm not wearing a helmet and i hit my head pretty hard, hitting the pavement with a very satisfying thud. i give up control of the bike and it crashes onto its stand. i have no idea what happened, but i'm very lucky as i can't even remember the last half hour of my ride. my legs are cramping up like crazy, but it's nothing a little massage can't fix. i take a few deep breaths and don't feel any bad effects of the fall - no pain in my head, neck or legs. as i'm feeling ok, i ride on to ken-omaru where the finish line is. i arrive an hour and a half later, have my photo taken and cross the finish line. one of the japanese announcers tells me that i'm second and i look around to see who is fourth. this is a bit of a shock as i expected to be in fourth place. the photo is taken, i have my medal, and i head back to the course to have my bike checked. we examine the rear wheel and discover that a needle was stuck in the inner tube of the left wheel and it is now flat. we get the wheel fixed, put some oil on it and put it back on the bicycle. i don't have any time to finish the race as i have to get back to my hotel, shower and change. i pack my

cycling kit, grab my bike and set off back to the hotel. i put my cycling kit in a waterproof carrier bag, which i attach to the handlebars of my bike. i wrap the front and rear mudguards in bubble wrap and place the front mudguard bag in it as well. the rear mudguard bag has some small nuts, bolts and washers, some tools and other bits and pieces in it. i take these items out and put them in my backpack.

the next step was to set up the 4-way valve and cover it with duct tape. it is basically a 2-way valve with a 30 degree slope between the two outlets, like the orientation of a toilet flush handle. it allows the helium to fill the balloon and get it ready for flight. the last thing we did was attach an inline valve from our 16" long standard-pressure globe to the exit of the v-cage. this allowed us to fill the balloons in an orderly fashion without risk of overpressurization. a typical method we use to attach the helium to the balloon is to measure the volume you want to fill, plug the globe, pump the helium through the valve and adjust the outflow line as required. we decided to use an inline valve because all the previous balloons' outflow hoses had been open to the top of the cage and the position of the outlet in the top makes it a convenient way to fill all balloons quickly. one way to calculate how many floats you will need is to figure out how many people you want to be at a gathering. if you plan to have the same number of people at each event, you can know how many floats you will need for each event. this method works well for getting at least the minimum number of floats. the settings section of alert center provides a wealth of control and configuration settings that can be applied to all alert types and alert groups. this configuration is flexible and modular, allowing you to easily manage the flow of alerts from each alert source, regardless of whether the alert is enabled or not. finally, the warning center allows you to view multiple types of actionable and non-actionable alerts as well as alert responses in a single window, so that you can more effectively prioritize your response. 5ec8ef588b
