when all players' progress is loaded, the leaderboard is displayed. from here, players can check their rank, kart, name, and number of coins. to obtain coins, players must finish races in single or two-player mode. more coins are gained when players win races and lose no coins. players can earn special features by winning specific races and show off. also, players earn special features by winning races and losing coins. co-operative mode adds a new twist to the game. to play the mode, the rear character must utilize a slide to steal an item from the track. the motion must be completed within one or two seconds as it is losing a point on the leaderboard. while racing in multiplayer, players are eventually ranked by the number of coins a player has obtained, and the player with the most coins receives a trophy. players can also compete with others via lan, rather than online, to earn better standings. a new feature added to the co-operative mode that was absent in the original mario kart game is the battle function. the battle action is triggered when the players collide with other carts. one moves their kart to the left, while the other moves theirs to the right, and throws items at each other

until one of them loses a kart. the player who throws an item gets the item, while the player who loses a kart gains the item. since battles can be set between any players, the player with the most coins can easily improve their standings during gameplay. from left to right, the characters are birdo, waluigi, donkey kong, diddy kong, bowser, yoshi, wario, link, kakarot, zero, pauline, tippi, and the playable characters that use the game boy player (with the exception of one of the two characters from mario's virtual boy).

the development was headed by two senior members of the mario kart development team, masashi koizumi and yoshiyuki momose. the former was the director and the latter was the assistant director. masashi koizumi, who was also the game's producer, stated that mario kart: double dash!! was intended to increase the number of players in the game. yoshiyuki momose was responsible for the game's artistic design. the audio tracks were arranged by the japanese pop rock band, m-flo, with lyrics performed by japanese singer-songwriter, hanaori takahashi. in contrast to the original mario kart, the track design is even more detailed than before, and the player is given the option of not having curves when starting the race, so the game can be played on a wide range of skill levels. the game features almost no loading times, with only a few exceptions, such as when a character or vehicle is in the carousel or the waiting screen and when the player picks items during a race. the game's first trophy was the "double dash number 1" trophy, which was awarded for a perfect 1,000,000 point race. despite starting with a total of 1 million points, the game completed the race after 1,200 laps. the game's second trophy, the "double dash number 2", was awarded after a perfect 1,200,000 point race. the third trophy, "double dash number 3", was given after a perfect 1,400,000 point race. no trophies were awarded for a perfect 1,500,000 point race or greater. the game allowed the user to earn the "double dash number 1" trophy before a perfect 1,000,000 point race could be completed.
