in the future, an artist like dre could start their own streaming service and sell their music directly to fans. or they could just release their music exclusively on their own service, but they'd have to give up their rights to the master recordings. if snoop dogg can come to an agreement with dre, then it might make sense for him to start his own streaming service and move these albums to the platform. even if that happens, it doesn't mean that all of these albums will be available on streaming services in the future. the business model for streaming has changed in the last few years and it's not always easy for labels to just give up their ips for streaming. even if they do it could be a long time before it actually happens and even then it's not certain they'll get the same deal dre received from apple. the death row imprint was founded by dr. dre and priority records owner suge knight in 1991, and soon grew to house many of dre's early releases. after a messy and controversial split in 1999, the label was purchased by ruthless records, where it would find its greatest success, as nearly every artist on the label would go on to become a platinum or gold-selling artist. however, when dr. dre left ruthless in 2008, he took over the label and eventually renamed it death row. he also brought on snoop dogg, who had originally released the bulk of his albums on aftermath, and made the label into a powerhouse in the rap game. the announcement comes nearly three months after it was reported that snoop dogg and suge knight had resolved their business differences, though no details on their partnership are available. in october 2019, both snoop dogg and suge knight were arrested for their involvement in the 2015 shooting of then-bodyguard danny woodson, who was fatally wounded when knight opened fire on a vehicle carrying four women and two men outside of the death row records offices in las vegas, nevada. knight pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in exchange for a reduced sentence and was sentenced to four years in prison. 5ec8ef588b
