in this chapter we present the overall approach and framework of the study, we also provide an overview of methodology, techniques and measures used to study quality. the section introduces the framework for evaluating the quality of medical services from the perspective of the client. according to the logic of this study, the quality of services is affected by the structure of production and service, and the relationship between them, and from the standpoint of clients, the quality of medical services can be defined as the satisfaction of medical services needs. the purpose of this study is to investigate the situation of medical services quality at hospitals and community healthcare centres from the perspectives of hospital clients, family members of patients, and residents in the region. therefore, we're trying to find out the root of the root causes of dissatisfaction with the services that patients and their families receive, and then to develop effective strategies to improve the quality of medical services. with the evidence below, we could know the benefits of green tea on diabetes by testing whether or not it would reduce the glucose level in the blood. the study of green tea on diabetes is one of the main fields for effective interventions as it is an alternative medicine of diabetes. if we take a look at the data collected from this study, it is interesting to note that the total number of responses referred to 'taking drugs to relieve stress' (82.39%) is well above the 38.86% that refers to 'taking drugs as a coping mechanism'. these frequencies are quite similar to those that refer to the use of tobacco (68.77%) and alcohol (33.22%). crack was the only drug with significantly higher figures among the survey participants.
