collection of some of the poems he wrote just before his death. In 1963, two months after I was born, Nirendranath took me with him and left Kolkata to start a new life. We were in a marriage that was turning out to be more difficult than he had anticipated. His wife, son, and daughter all lived in his hometown of Faridpur. Meanwhile, in an act of defiance he decided to become a poet, hoping that being a poet would help him to protect himself from the world. He left his family and we moved to the village of Madhail in East Bengal. Soon, life grew even more difficult. He had become the target of the Army's political opponents, who wanted to seize power and re-write Bengali history. The political upheaval was turning East Bengali villages into ghost towns. Those who had money fled, those who had not were trapped. At the time Nirendranath was active in organising refugee families to safety and working to get aid to them, which meant helping many people. 5ec8ef588b
